

Talking About the Results

*A companion to the free
Can They Still Live Alone? assessment*

The assessment is not a verdict. It is an honest starting point for a conversation that most families need to have. This page helps you share what you observed, compare answers with others, and keep the focus on safety and independence — not control.

“Differences in perception are often the most important data.”

SAMPLE SCRIPTS

Gentle ways to open the conversation

When sharing your own observations

"I went through the assessment based on what I've actually seen over the last few months. I'd like to share what came up so we can look at it together — not as a final answer, just as a starting point."

"I'm not saying we have to change anything tomorrow. I just want us to be looking at the same picture."

When inviting other family members to do the assessment

"Would you be willing to go through the same nine questions based on what you've observed? It only takes about ten minutes. Then we can compare notes. The differences might tell us something useful."

When answers don't match

"You and I are seeing some things differently. That's actually helpful. It means we need to look closer together rather than assume one of us is wrong."

"I notice you marked fewer concerns than I did. Can you help me understand what you're seeing that I might be missing?"

When the person living alone is part of the conversation

"This isn't about taking anything away. It's about making sure the systems around you are strong enough so you can keep living the way you want for as long as possible."

"I'd rather we talk about this while things are mostly okay than wait until something forces the decision."

A helpful mindset: You are not trying to win an argument. You are trying to get the whole family looking at the same reality so better decisions can be made later — with less crisis and less regret.

FAMILY COMPARISON NOTES

What each of us is seeing

Use this space after two or more people have completed the assessment. Note the areas where answers differed the most — those are often the most important places to look together.

Areas where we see things differently

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____
4. _____

What we agree needs attention first

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____

The goal of this conversation is not to force a big decision today. It is to make sure the people who care are looking at the same picture so that, when decisions do need to be made, they can be made with clearer eyes and less panic.

Life happens. Best have a plan.
